PRESIDENT TM MBEKI
Address at the Opening of the World Summit for Sustainable Development, Johannesburg,
26 August 2002.

“We do not have a new agenda to discover. We have no obligation to relearn what we already know about the parlous state of human society and the environment. There is no need for us to reopen battles that have been fought and resolved. There is every need for us to demonstrate to the billions of people we lead that we are committed to the vision and practise of human solidarity, that we do not accept that human society should be constructed on the basis of a savage principle of the survival of the fittest.”
